- The "Second Bill of Rights" (13th through 16th amendments) is signed and ratified by both the Union, and Confederacy. With the signing of these amendments, the "State Compact" system is established, codifying and legally recognizing the political reality caused by the Hell Wars. In doing so, the US is reshaped as a voluntary conglomeration of various sovereign states, as well as compacts of states, which are, for the most part co-equal, excepting in the case of presidential elections, wherein delegates are apportioned according to the votes of individual states, rather than compacts. By and large, the federal government is much weaker than before the war, with many of its functions being superseded by the governments of both states and compacts. In addition to this, female suffrage is legally enshrined, in large part due to both the unprecedented participation of women in combat and the war effort in general, as well as dramatically different social mores in the wake of the Hell Wars.

- The Colossus of Liberty is completed.

Consequently, every June^{27th} is celebrated in the US as “E-Day” (Emancipation Day), this typically entails a day off work, similar to Independence Day.
